XYZ (Cash App Borrow deep dive, Square GP vs. GPV analysis, Square ISO program contribution analysis), PYPL, Ramp, Visa RPO analysis, Bank Issuer Volumes, On the Block #5 (XYZ), CMRC, WEX, East Coast Industry & Investor "open mic" September 16th, Clover (FISV) co-founder dinner, etc.

Block (XYZ) - Cash App Borrow Primer, Analysis, & Opportunity Overview: Given growing investor focus on Cash App Borrow and its strategic importance to Cash App monetization, we provide a 50+ page reference report and opportunity framework for the product. We view Borrow as both a direct monetization lever (fixed fees earned on loan amounts) and an indirect driver of engagement and subsequent monetization (e.g., higher inflows, card spend, and retention among Borrow users). Borrow has proven to be a key driver of improving monetization within the Cash App ecosystem, leveraging Block's proprietary data advantage and embedded distribution to scale a high-frequency, short-duration lending product. The product has ramped meaningfully in recent periods, supported by expanding eligibility (including nationwide rollout and Cash App Green), increasing loan sizes, and repeat usage, with performance underpinned by stable credit trends and improving cohort behavior. Our analysis (Excel available by request) focuses on the incremental contribution from Borrow, with our illustrative framework suggesting the product can contribute ~mid 20s% adj. EPS growth in 2026 and ~MSD - HSD% in 2027–2028 as the company laps the expansion of its user TAM in 2026 (UBSe). See full deep dive here.

Block (XYZ) - Cash App Borrow update: Following our 50+ page Cash App Borrow primer and EPS analysis, Block published Inside Cash App Borrow: Expanding Access Through Responsible Lending, which provided incremental borrower-base detail, including that 56% of Borrow customers report household income above $70k. While this income mix suggests Borrow is not exclusively a low-income product, we continue to believe Borrow usage likely skews lower-income on a volume-adjusted basis, given Borrow users appear to be among Cash App's more active / engaged customers. This view is supported by Block's disclosure that 70% of Borrow actives have credit scores below 580, as well as prior Cash App commentary that highly engaged users tend to earn ~$45-50k annually. Net, we view the new disclosure as broadly consistent with our prior framework: Borrow eligibility appears tied to higher engagement and underwriting signals, but actual usage likely over-indexes toward the more financially constrained segment of Cash App's engaged base.

Block (XYZ) - Analysis of Square's GP vs. GPV Spread: While we believe gross profit (GP) growth is the most important metric to consider when evaluating Square, the gap between GP and gross payment volume (GPV) growth has become topical as GP growth began to more meaningfully lag GPV growth in 2H 2025. In order to better understand the confluence of drivers that have contributed to the spread between Square's GP and GPV growth in 2025 and 2026 (and forecast a preliminarily view for 2027), we provide a time-series analysis that illustratively sizes the various contributing headwinds (i.e., hardware losses, incremental processing costs, mix shifts, etc.) and tailwinds (i.e., pricing, tariff refunds, etc.). In summary, our analysis suggests Block's medium-term guidance calling for roughly similar GP and GPV growth is achievable. See full note here.

Block (XYZ) - Square's ISO program update & analysis of run-rate GPV contributions (~300bps to FY 2027 GPV growth at current run-rate):

We provide a recap of a recent webinar featuring James Shepard of CCSalesPro (host), Mike Collins of Square (Head of Square's Reseller/ISO Program), Vlad Sadovskiy of Netevia, and Thibault Le Conte & Brian Rodriguez of OrderOut. Topics included Square's expansion beyond self-service merchant acquisition, indirect distribution, merchant onboarding, reseller economics (commission splits), pricing flexibility, OrderOut's white-label platform, Netevia's banking services, post-sale support, and more. Square recently disclosed ~140 ISO relationships, producing the equivalent of ~70 field sales representatives (as of March 2026). We believe the program has continued to ramp since this disclosure, with the webinar suggesting a current pace of ~1.5k merchants being added per month (assuming ~7-8 merchants per field sales representative would suggest a run-rate of the equivalent of ~200 field sales representatives already, a meaningful ramp vs. the March disclosure). We believe the current run-rate of ~1.5k merchants per month will be supportive of an incremental ~1.5% to GPV growth in 2H 2026 and an incremental ~3% to FY 2027. Our analysis assumes an average merchant size of ~$500k in annual GPV. Importantly, the analysis is intended simply to quantify contributions based solely on today's ~1.5k run-rate, which has the potential to ramp meaningfully over the near-medium term. We continue to believe the combination of Square's ramping field sales teams and ISO/reseller programs are poised to deliver GPV acceleration into FY 2027. See full note here. Excel analysis available by request.

Block (XYZ) - Buyside Call with Head of IR post Q2 2026 Earnings (August 5): We will be hosting Block's Head of Investor Relations, Matthew Ross, for a call at 7:30pm ET (the night of earnings) – this call is intended to be APAC oriented, although US investors are welcome to join as well. We will start with 2-3 questions and then go directly to investor Q&A. Click here to register.

NYC East Coast Payments & FinTech Discussion (September 16): We invite industry participants (private & public companies, consultants, experts, etc.) and investor clients of all sorts (LO, HF, VC, PE, etc.) for an early evening combination of networking and a moderated "open mic" industry discussion on Wednesday, September 16th, from 4:30-7:30pm ET at the UBS Office in New York (Eleven Madison Avenue, Level 2B, New York, NY, 10010). The event will start with a welcome reception, followed by a group discussion/content, and then close with another reception. Many of the East Coast based industry participants that join our Napa event in May are likely to join this event in September. Potential themes to be discussed include: 1) Visa & Mastercard topics around Europe, stablecoins, agentic commerce, A2A, etc.; 2) Visa & Mastercard pricing, VAS, tokenization, etc.; 3) Regulatory items around CCCA, MDL-1720, Visa DOJ, debit interchange, etc.; 4) Modern POS (Toast, Square, SpotOn, Clover, Shift4, DoorDash, etc.); 5) eCommerce checkout (e.g., Apple Pay, PayPal, Shop Pay, BNPL, Stripe Link, etc.); 6) Core banking and issuer processing competition and the Pismo entrance; and more. Registration required, click here to register.

NYC Group Dinner - Modern POS Competition, featuring Mark Schulze, Co-Founder of Clover, former VP Fiserv, & current CRO at Confidence Systems (September 17): We will be hosting Mark Schulze, a Co-Founder of Clover and a former Fiserv VP, for a dinner in NYC on Thursday, September 17th, at 6:00pm at Jams (1414 6th Avenue, New York, NY 10019). We will discuss the restaurant and retail POS competitive landscape, alongside an opportunity for investors to ask questions about the industry, mechanics, history, etc. Mark brings expertise in POS payments, merchant acquiring, integrated software, and the evolution of cloud-based POS platforms. We are in the process of taking requests. Please send request to UBS sales and/or our team.

PayPal (PYPL) - Stripe and Advent Reportedly Offer to Acquire PayPal: Reuters reported \(7/14\) that Stripe and Advent International offered to acquire PayPal for $60.50 per share earlier this month, valuing the company at >$53b. According to the article, the proposed deal would see Stripe and Advent each own an equal 50% stake in PayPal rather than breaking up the company (with Advent already owning payment assets including Xplor, Nuvei, Thredd, etc. in its portfolio), and is backed by ~$50b in committed bank financing. The press report notes that Stripe and Advent have not yet received a response from PayPal, and the offer may not result in a deal. Stripe's scale (~

$1.9tr of volume in 2025, growing ~34% YoY) and valuation (~$159b as of recent tender offer) are both supportive of such a transaction, although it would require some combination of debt and/or cash raise (a requirement likely to be satisfied by the reported ~$50b in committed bank financing). Given the level of investor interest on this topic, we provide below a set of initial brief thoughts, which are likely to be iterative as we learn more and/or further assess implications. UBS Private AI, Software, & Internet Conference - Ramp's Head of Applied AI Solutions:

As part of our 5th annual UBS Private AI, Software & Internet Conference in Menlo Park, we hosted Ori Daniel, Head of Applied AI Solutions at Ramp, for a discussion of Ramp's revenue model, product offerings, distribution strategy, and competitive differentiation, with a focus on Ramp's role in enabling AI-driven finance operations. For context, Ramp helps businesses manage and automate finance workflows with a platform that has expanded from corporate cards and expense management into bill pay, procurement, travel, treasury, accounting automation and, increasingly, broader AI-enabled financial operations. Our discussion centered around Ramp's service and ROI first approach to building AI-enabled financial solutions for clients, an offering that highlights Ramp's continued evolution into a broader multi-product financial operations platform focused on helping businesses save time and money through the automation of fragmented financial workflows. See full recap here.

Bank Issuer Volumes Takeaways (V, MA, merchant acquirers, etc.): Total debit & credit volume accelerated sequentially on a YoY basis by ~150bps, driven by debit & credit volumes accelerating by ~180bps and ~120bps, respectively. This compares to our total US volumes modeled at a ~50bps acceleration for Visa and ~10bps acceleration for Mastercard on a reported basis. Further, Street (VA) estimates for US volumes call for a ~(70)bps deceleration for Visa and ~60bps acceleration for Mastercard. As to merchant acquiring volumes, YoY growth decelerated by ~(100)bps to ~0.1% YoY (we note that the merchant acquiring volumes are representative of Elavon [USB] only – JPM stopped disclosing their merchant acquiring volumes after CQ1 2024). Data available in Excel by request. See full first read here.

Visa (V) - Sizing the Growth Contribution & Visibility Associated with Remaining Performance Obligations (RPO); Overview of Mechanics:

We provide an overview of the mechanics and an analysis sizing the contribution from Visa's growing balance of Remaining Performance Obligations (RPOs) to Visa's total and Value Added Services (VAS) net revenue growth. Our view is that the RPO provides a small degree of net revenue growth visibility, particularly as it relates to VAS. Our analysis aims to help investors better understand an increasing, albeit minor, portion of Visa's net revenue growth that is associated with the recognition of a growing book of deferred and contracted revenue. In summary, Visa's RPOs largely represent a subset of contracted value-in-kind incentives (VIK) associated with Visa's VAS, and we believe VAS paid for via VIK provides a growth contribution of ~0.5%-1% to Visa's total net revenue and ~2%-4% to VAS. See full report here.

Block (XYZ) - On the Block #5 Recap: Willem Avé (Global Head of Product) joined Matt Ross (Head of Investor Relations) for "On the Block #5," the fifth installment of Block's Q&A series with company leadership. The session focused primarily on Square's product evolution and the opportunity for AI tools to help SMBs run better businesses, with particular emphasis on Managerbot, the strategic pillars underpinning Square's product reset (commerce tools that make selling easier, automation, and ecosystem connectivity), Square's platform-first architecture, Neighborhoods, seller data / insights, inventory and staffing workflows, marketing automation, and how AI could reshape what is possible for small and medium-sized businesses on Square. See full recap here.

Commerce.com (CMRC) - Assuming coverage at Neutral; Awaiting Signs of Meaningful Top Line Re-Acceleration:

We assume coverage with a Neutral rating. Across BigCommerce (commerce engine), Makeswift (storefront), and Feedonomics (intelligence and agentic capabilities) under its umbrella, Commerce.com has the elements for share gain in eCommerce and the tools to help merchants future-proof against market shift towards agentic commerce. However, we believe the competitive intensity among larger and/or fast growing competitors will likely put some pressure on volume growth / monetization improvement in B2C commerce, requiring more growth contribution from B2B commerce which carries lower monetization rates. Despite steps in the right direction with its recent rebranding, cross-sell motion, embedded payments (and likely also other financial services down the road), etc., we see limited catalysts for meaningful inflection in top-line growth. We stay on the sidelines given uncertainty around stronger revenue growth without margin deterioration. As such, we view the stock as fairly valued with the market pricing in ~MSD top line growth in 2027, near Street and our forecasts. See full note here.

WEX Inc (WEX) - Q2 2026 Earnings Recap: WEX raised FY 2026 revenue and Adj. net income by 1% and 3%, respectively, at midpoint (almost) entirely on fuel price impacts, with Adj. operating margin improvement of +75bps YoY ex. fuel impact unchanged. As to Q2, revenue and adj. EPS beat Street estimates by ~2% and ~5% respectively, with the revenue beat in Mobility partially offset by a modest miss in Benefits and Corporate Payments. Mobility segment revenue growth was roughly flat sequentially on an organic macro neutral basis at 3.1% YoY as a ~2% drag from lower than expected late fees (~1% drag to total revenue) was largely offset by ~1% contribution from BP (fully live in Q2) and ~1% from improved underlying trends, with FY guide contemplating a similar late fee impact and BP contribution in 2H, as well as $15mm of incremental revenue from Mobility pricing actions. While the underlying FY26 revenue and EPS outlook are little changed, stable to modest improving trends across all segments along with a degree of comp dynamics give WEX line of sight to exiting the year within its long-term organic revenue growth range of 5-10% (UBSe ~5% vs. ~4% prior). This should be further boosted by strength in oil price (despite volatility) and commitment to returning vast majority of FCF to shareholders via buybacks while modestly improving leverage. Additional Reports⁽¹⁾

Shopify (SHOP) - Shop Campaigns Overview & Analysis: Shopify is building a discovery and performance-marketing layer through the Shop app and Shop Campaigns offering. Shop Campaigns enables merchants to acquire customers through targeted offers in the Shop app (mainly in the form of discounts today, alongside selective usage of Shop Cash) while merchants pay only for attributable customer acquisition. While still nascent today, we believe Shop Campaigns and the lead generation advertising business could become a more meaningful component of the long-term growth algorithm should the company decide to further invest behind the Shop app user base (increasing awareness as a top-of-funnel search tool), enabling greater monetization of its commerce network (via retaining a greater portion of the CAC paid by merchants). This report outlines the Shop Campaigns product offering and provides an illustrative framework to quantify the potential upside both in the near-term (more limited) and in a longer-term blue sky scenario (assuming investment behind scale and greater monetization). As part of this report, our Excel framework (available by request) allows investors to input assumptions around GMV penetration, lead generation monetization rate, etc., to arrive at potential gross profit contributions. See full note here.

Fiserv (FISV) - Non-Clover SMB Analysis: We published a ~30 page deep dive on Fiserv's Non-Clover SMB segment, a portion of Fiserv's business that makes up ~20% of total company revenue, or ~40% of the Merchant Solution segment. Following Fiserv's recent investor day, we provide an analysis of Fiserv's non-Clover SMB merchant solutions business, with an aim of demystifying the various components, positioning, and growth outlook. See full deep dive here.

Toast (TOST) - SaaS ARR per location analysis; back-book & growth markets related thoughts: We continue to believe that total ARR growth is the most important metric for Toast investors, particularly when viewed in conjunction with strong payback periods (in the mid-teens months range, albeit with headwinds from elevated hardware cost potentially mildly extending payback periods). We expect SaaS ARR continues to compound in the ~low 20s% benefitting from a combination of ~high-teens location growth and ~MSD SaaS ARR per location increases (UBSe). From a SaaS ARR per location perspective, Toast's front book (new customers) tends to come in at a lower level, with Enterprise locations in particular the most dilutive (albeit with still attractive paybacks and an LTV/CAC that is better than SMB restaurants given the reduced churn / longer life of the relationship). The SaaS ARR per location pressure presented by new customer additions places added emphasis on existing customer improvements, mainly from incremental SaaS module attach (e.g., Toast IQ Grow as a more recent addition, which we believe provides a degree of support to a slightly more extended period of ~MSD SaaS ARR per location growth), but also benefiting from a degree of pricing. With these mix shifts in context, we update our SaaS ARR analysis including front-book SaaS ARR per location considerations by gross add location type (e.g., Enterprise, international, retail F&B, and US core restaurant). Visa & Mastercard (V & MA) - An alternative look at the net revenue growth algorithm; Adding DCF analysis to determine what's priced in: We published a ~50 page deep dive on V & MA as an addendum to our original "Visa & Mastercard Growth Algorithm" note. In this report, we take a different spin on how we approach the net revenue growth algorithm, focused on 5 different elements of the business, including the domestic portions of Consumer, Commercial, and Visa Direct, as well as Cross-Border and Value-Added Services revenue (more on this below). In addition to our segment level build up to net revenue growth, we have also added a DCF to both our Visa & Mastercard models. The impetus here was to sensitize for several investor concerns surrounding the stocks today (whether merited or not) and allow investors to input their own assumptions to see what the share price implies in slower revenue growth impacted scenarios (we provide more detail below). All Excel available by request and within our Visa & Mastercard model. See full report here.

Shopify (SHOP) - Demystifying Shopify's Retail POS (In-store) Business: We published a ~45 page deep dive on SHOP expanding upon Shopify's POS growth opportunity that we first examined in our note analyzing Shopify's Long-Term Growth Algorithm. In this report, we provide an informative overview of Shopify's POS Software and Hardware offerings; a detailed analysis of our modeling assumptions behind Shopify POS gross profit across subscription revenue, payments revenue (with assumptions for GMV, GPV, and take rate), and other merchant solutions (which includes hardware); and an estimate of the US in-store retail payments TAM and the relative market share of Shopify POS and competitors. In summary, we believe Shopify POS business is an important part of the longer-term growth algorithm and a relatively underappreciated portion of the company's terminal value, particularly given the differentiated offering (combination of Shopify eCommerce / ecosystem with in-store POS), large TAM (in-store volumes are multiple times larger than eCommerce), and a relatively fragmented market with the absence of a modern leader (vs. SMB & Mid-market restaurant POS where Toast has ~30% share of volume in the US, UBSe). See full report here.

Visa & Mastercard (V & MA) - An alternative look at the net revenue growth algorithm: As an addendum to our original "Visa & Mastercard Growth Algorithm" note, we take a different spin on how we approach the net revenue growth algorithm, focused on 5 different elements of the business, including the domestic portions of Consumer, Commercial, and Visa Direct, as well as Cross-Border and Value-Added Services revenue (more on this below). In addition to our segment level build up to net revenue growth, we have also added a DCF to both our Visa & Mastercard models. The impetus here was to sensitize for several investor concerns surrounding the stocks today (whether merited or not) and allow investors to input their own assumptions to see what the share price implies in slower revenue growth impacted scenarios (we provide more detail below). All Excel available by request and within our Visa & Mastercard model. Full report here.

Visa & Mastercard's US Adjusted Volume spread vs. Addressable PCE analysis: We provide an analysis of how Visa & Mastercard's "true" C2B volumes compare to our definition of addressable PCE. With Visa & Mastercard US volume growth largely residing in the ~6-7% growth range over the past few years on a reported basis, investors often ask about the spread between Visa & Mastercard's reported US volume growth relative to US PCE. We believe that any such analysis must adjust card network volumes for non-C2B flows (B2B, Visa Direct/Mastercard Move), while also adjusting PCE volumes to remove portions with more limited carded addressability (e.g., healthcare, housing, financial services, etc.). With that said, we expect the card networks to continue to deliver above PCE growth in the US on a reported basis, driven in part by ramping contributions from new flows (Visa Direct & Mastercard Move, B2B). Excel time series of our analysis available by request. See full report here.

"The Question" for Restaurant POS - A deeper look at the restaurant POS merchant acquiring market (TOST, XYZ, FISV, FOUR, SpotOn, etc.): We published a ~80+ page deep dive on the restaurant POS merchant acquiring market. Given the level of competition in the restaurant POS market, investors often ask whether the major modern POS providers can continue to grow volumes at similar levels in the out years when the majority of the legacy conversion opportunity window has closed. The topic is increasingly relevant today as companies step up salesforce hiring, absorb elevated hardware costs, and contend with AI enabled product improvements that further sharpen competitive dynamics. This report (likely iterative) is our attempt to answer this question quantitatively as well as provide a sizing and overview of the US food services market opportunity and competitive landscape across modern POS providers and legacy systems. The report includes considerations across product, distribution, and pricing. We focus our analysis across seven named providers (Toast, Square, Clover, Shift4, and PAR, Micros [Oracle], and NCR Voyix on a historical basis) that are either within our coverage (and have a time series of disclosures or our own estimates) or have/had significant market share. In addition to our Excel analysis (available by request), we include takeaways from the second edition of our US SMB Payments Survey (restaurant portion only). The intention of this report is to serve as reference material for outlining the debate and presenting a quantitative framework to think about the market opportunity and competitive landscape. See full deep dive here.

PayPal (PYPL) - Assessing Branded Checkout Competition; Global eCommerce Edition: We expand our US eCommerce checkout method benchmarking analysis with an analysis of trends in international (i.e., global, ex-US, ex-China) eCommerce checkout methods to assess the potential impact of competition on PayPal's global Branded Checkout growth. This analysis serves as a reference and overview of annual market share trends in global eCommerce checkout methods (e.g., credit and debit cards, accelerated checkout/buttons [Apple Pay, PayPal, Shop Pay, etc.], BNPL, etc) and evaluates market share trends across several sub-segments of the eCommerce market (i.e., desktop vs. mobile and retail vs. non-retail, backing out less addressable portions of volume such as Amazon and China) to size the potential impact to PayPal's Branded Checkout Business. The report outlines a quantitative framework to gauge the potential for runway and/or extent of competitive pressures for the Branded Checkout button, inclusive of market sizing and competitor estimates (illustrative and via scenarios). All analysis within this report available in Excel by request. Full report here.

Shopify (SHOP) - Analyzing the Long-Term Growth Algorithm: Given Shopify's success across four TAM expansive growth pillars in Enterprise, International, In-store POS, and B2B (EI&B), we further examine the segment level TAM and market share dynamics to arrive at potential contributions to both GMV and gross profit growth over the coming decade. Our analysis suggests the potential for Shopify to compound GMV at a ~15-21% CAGR, while similarly increasing gross profit at a ~15-20% CAGR from 2025-2035E. As part of this analysis, we estimate potential contributions to growth across each of the pillars (Enterprise, International SMB, In-store POS, B2B, and core North America SMB) based on illustrative assumptions around TAM sizing & growth rates (today's sizing and 2035E), market share forecast ranges (today's share and 2035E), unit economics, payments penetration, and additional attach rates. Please see the full report here, "Shopify: Analyzing the Long-Term Growth Algorithm".

Shopify (SHOP) - The Enterprise Opportunity; Business overview, sizing, & potential contribution analysis: Shopify is having success across three TAM expansive growth pillars in Enterprise, International, and In-store POS (EI&I). Given the company's success moving upmarket with larger and enterprise merchants, we focus this report specifically on the enterprise retail eCommerce opportunity, including a quantitative illustrative analysis around the potential contributions to GMV growth at various share levels over the coming decade. Additionally, in this report, we have included: 1) thoughts on Shopify's offering within the enterprise segment; 2) an overview of the competitive landscape; 3) illustrative enterprise segment unit economics; 4) a compiled list of a selection of Shopify enterprise customers, including a check of whether the Shop Pay button had been added at each of the sites (where we found Shop Pay at 28 of 48 named enterprise customers, suggesting the button is gaining traction with larger and enterprise merchants [~2-4x TAM expansive vs. SMB] which has implications for PayPal); and 5) additional capabilities, points, research, etc. All Excel analysis available in our Shopify model and by request. Please see the full report here, "Shopify: The Enterprise Opportunity; Business overview, sizing, & potential contribution analysis".

Shopify (SHOP) – Core vs. Plus revenue & gross profit mix analysis: We published a deep dive report on Shopify Core ("Standard" Shopify) vs. Shopify Plus merchant revenue mix, gross profit mix, and attach rates - please see our full note here. While the company regularly discloses revenue and gross profit by segment (Subscription Solutions vs. Merchant Solutions), at its December 2023 Investor Day the company provided additional Core vs. Plus revenue mix disclosures (specific to 2015, 2019, and 2023E). This allowed us to further break down the revenue and gross profit by Core vs. Plus across each segment (which we divide into Subscriptions Solutions, Shopify Payments [within Merchant Solutions], and "Other" Merchant Solutions), which enables us to illustratively estimate gross margins and attach rates. All analyses in this note are included in our updated Shopify model, available upon request. Our analysis is built upon our prior recent work breaking down GMV and Shopify Payments GPV by Core vs. Plus, as detailed in our Shopify Payments Monetization Deep Dive.

Block (XYZ) - Demystifying Block - Product-level Reference Modeling Primer: We published a ~100-page deep dive report breaking down our product-level modeling of Block. Given recent product additions and evolution (e.g., Cash App Pay, Cash App Borrow expanding to new states, etc.), we provide an updated reference and guide to our approach to modeling Block's Square and Cash App ecosystems, including an overview of product-level builds and relevant updates. As part of this analysis, we include descriptions and modeling frameworks for the various volume and revenue buckets (transaction-based and subscription services revenue [S&S]) for each ecosystem, thoughts on Block's sales marketing expense components, and a summary of various disclosures that we use to calibrate our product-level builds (i.e., various product segment charts we have used to hone our model for certain historical periods). Our updated Excel model and all builds are available by request. Full report here.

Visa Analysis & Opportunity in 2026; Analysis of a selection of key investor questions for the year ahead: While the main near-term question is focused on the Credit Card Competition Act (which we address separately via our report "Additional thoughts on the Credit Card Competition Act"), this report aims to answer some of the additional and most common questions we receive on Visa's FY 2026 opportunity, including a selection of topics spanning Value-Added Services (VAS) contributions to net revenue growth, US inbound cross-border travel, pricing measures (particularly in FY 2H), FX volatility, and more. In summary, we see the potential for Visa's net revenue growth to slightly accelerate (vs. ~11.5% organic FXN in FY 2025) in FY 2026 (absent any potential disruption from Trump's proposed 10% interest rate cap on credit cards), even without the support of OBBA-related spending benefits. Further, Visa's guidance has already digested an elevated operating expense guide and a higher tax rate, with the potential for estimate revisions to be driven by topline upside. While both Visa & Mastercard remain top picks and many of the topics here are broadly applicable to both companies, this report focuses specifically on Visa. See report here.

Visa & Mastercard (V & MA) - Cross Border Deep Dive: We published a ~60-page deep dive on the moats of Visa and Mastercard's cross-border businesses where we discuss topics like sustainability, efficiency, scalability, and much more. In addition to the global network strength, cross-border transactions also tend to be more defensible against factors such as nationalism or domestic regulations. In this report, we provide an overview of the mechanics of cross-border transactions, historic cross-border volume growth, and mix on a sub-segment level basis (travel, eCommerce, remittances, payouts, other addressable payments), alongside revenue mix and yield estimates. While we believe total cross-border volume only represents a ~HSD percentage of card network volume [~MSD ex-Intra Europe], we estimate total cross-border revenue represents ~40-45% of card network net revenue in recent years. We support our estimates by aggregating cross-border related revenues across Visa & Mastercard's income statement (explained in more detail in the report across the various revenue line items) and researching publicly disclosed cross-border fees that the card networks charge both acquirers / merchants and issuers. Additionally, we include estimates for total cross-border volume growth going forward (~LDD for Visa vs. ~mid-teens for Mastercard) which translates to an annual yield benefit of ~0.20-0.35bps for Visa and ~0.45-0.60bps for Mastercard given expectations for cross-border volume growth to be above total company levels (expectation reiterated at Visa's investor day). All analysis contained in this report is available in Excel by request. Full report here.

Visa & Mastercard (V & MA) - Demystifying the Models; A Modeling Reference:

We published a ~100-page report, "Demystifying the Models: a Modeling Reference" that highlights various differences across the two companies' reporting structures. We include descriptions of the various revenue (& incentive) and expense lines, differences for each line between Visa & Mastercard, historical context, income statement geography (e.g., location of value added services [VAS]), and a framework for modeling considerations across each line. Full report here. Information in this report is as of publishing date, and portions of the information may no longer be current.

Visa & Mastercard (V & MA) – Analyzing the Medium-Term Growth Algorithm; Updated analysis & incremental details on growth & yield components:

We published a ~100-page deep dive report on Visa & Mastercard, where we analyze the medium-term growth algorithms for Visa & Mastercard from both a volume (PCE + cash-to-card-conversion + new flows + other Mastercard specific opportunities) and yield (value added services, cross-border, pricing and other mix-related, rebates incentives) perspective. We include additional detail around growth yield components (e.g., Visa Direct volume yield impacts, pricing mix considerations, Maestro conversions, etc.). The report also serves as a primer on many aspects of the card network's business models. Our conclusion is an expectation for ~8-9% compounding medium-term revenue growth for Visa and ~10% for Mastercard (rough mid-points within wider ranges provided in this report). We continue to believe that the card networks have many attractive qualities as durable high-quality compounders, including their balanced exposure (discretionary vs. non-discretionary, goods vs. services, online vs. in-store), ability to grow through moderate recessionary conditions (expense flexibility), profitability (~55-70% EBIT margins, high FCF conversion), high-quality EPS figures (GAAP-like and unburdened by substantial SBC), and expansion into new flows (notably via Visa Direct Mastercard Send, expanding the TAM beyond PCE-related flows). Our analysis and historical data are available in Excel by request. Full report here.

Visa & Mastercard (V & MA) – Value-Added Services Overview and Medium-Term Growth Algorithm:

We published a ~50-page deep dive report on Visa & Mastercard's value-added services (VAS). As a result of investor concerns over more mature cash to card trends in certain developed markets, combined with a more recent re-acceleration of value-added services-related net revenue growth, this component for both networks (VAS for Visa, VAS&S for Mastercard) has come into greater focus. We attempt to provide an illustrative framework for the different components within value-added services across both companies. From a high level, value-added services growth can be broken down between: 1) transaction related services (e.g. fraud, risk identity, cybersecurity, authentication, data and analytics, etc.); and 2) all other services (consulting, advisory, loyalty / card benefits), alongside the Solutions segment that is specific to Mastercard (real-time ACH payment technology [e.g., Vocalink, Nets], bill-pay, cross-border services, open banking, etc.). Within transaction related services, we break down the growth between transaction growth (using company reported transaction growth as a proxy), incremental penetration of existing products, pricing actions, and any additional products introduced (both organically and inorganically). Detailed analysis available in Excel by request. Full report here. This analysis is supportive of the persistence of net revenue growth over the medium-term. Specifically, we expected ~8-9% compounding medium-term revenue growth for Visa and ~10% for Mastercard as part of our report, Visa & Mastercard: Analyzing the Medium-Term Growth Algorithm, where we analyze the medium-term growth algorithms from both a volume (PCE + cash-to-card-conversion [\[report\]](#) + new flows + other Mastercard specific opportunities) and yield (value-added services, cross-border, pricing and other mix-related, rebates incentives) perspective.

Overview of US A2A Payment Rails Use Cases: As a response to investor interest and incoming requests, we published an A2A report to serve as a primer on the broader US account-to-account (A2A) payments topic (including overviews of the ACH system, RTP, FedNow, Zelle, and others), select use cases where A2A payments could see traction, and certain barriers (commercial, mechanical, inertia, etc.) that may limit broader adoption outside specific use cases. Our view remains that traditional C2B payments may prove challenging for A2A to disintermediate, particularly in markets (like the US) that do not have regulated interchange rates (that contributes to funding of rewards programs). For additional details, please see our full report here.

"The Question 6.0" merchant acquiring deep dive: We published "The Question 6.0 - A framework for sizing and analyzing the various swimlanes of the US merchant acquiring market." Investors first asked the question, "Can the merchant acquiring businesses within Fiserv, Global Payments, and Worldpay continue to grow ~HSD-LDD, with platforms like Stripe, Adyen, Toast, Shopify, Square, and Checkout.com now at greater scale?" (analysis of global volumes). A few years later, the question evolved to, "How much runway is left in the US in terms of acquiring revenue?" (analysis of US revenue). Further iterations of this analysis placed added focus on four broadly defined swimlanes within US merchant acquiring: 1) Software platforms (owned horizontal & vertical SaaS businesses such as Square, Toast, Shopify, Clover, etc. that serve as a system of record for the underlying SMB, alongside the distribution partners for these SaaS platforms); 2) Payments partners (merchant acquirers & PSPs such as Stripe Connect, Adyen for Platforms, Global Payments Integrated, Worldpay for Platforms/Payrix, etc. that embed payments into software); 3) SMB direct (traditional payments distribution not tightly integrated to a POS and/or other software platform that supports business operations); and 4) Enterprise merchants (direct distribution to large enterprise merchants). This analysis also expands upon the software-led channel within the SMB segment, outlining the range of operating model options SaaS businesses have for partnering with PSPs, including illustrative unit economics implications. In this report, we update and expand upon all of this analysis, while also including takeaways from our recent SMB Payments survey. The intention of this report is to outline the debate and present a quantitative framework for thinking about share gains & losses within US merchant acquiring over the next ~5 years. Valuation Method and Risk Statement

Valuation Method and Risk Statement

Key risks include: 1) Macro-related, in particular as it relates to consumer spending; 2) Regulatory, related to interchange-related caps (fees earned by bank issuers vs. network fees earned by the card networks); 3) Cross-border (travel eCommerce) trends given outsized yields vs. domestic transactions; 4) M&A integration and execution; and 5) FX-related, both in the form of transaction (given meaningful international exposure) and exposure to volatility (elevated FX spreads earned during periods of higher currency volatility).

Our targets are generally multiples-based and informed in part by relative multiples-to-growth (MTG), with higher relative MTG considered for companies we believe have greater persistence of growth, while also considering additional company-specific factors (e.g., customer concentration, FCF conversion, SBC GAAP metrics, various potential areas of upside not modeled, business mix [discretionary vs. non-discretionary, cyclicality, etc.], current and longer-term margin potential, relative levels of risk/confidence in estimates, etc.) alongside illustrative DCF analysis for a subset of companies (i.e., DCF used only as tool to better gauge what is implied in multiples).

Investing in structured investments involves significant risks. For a detailed discussion of the risks involved in investing in any particular structured investment, you must read the relevant offering materials for that investment. Structured investments are unsecured obligations of a particular issuer with returns linked to the performance of an underlying asset. Depending on the terms of the investment, investors could lose all or a substantial portion of their investment based on the performance of the underlying asset. Investors could also lose their entire investment if the issuer becomes insolvent. UBS does not guarantee in any way the obligations or the financial condition of any issuer or the accuracy of any financial information provided by any issuer. Structured investments are not traditional investments and investing in a structured investment is not equivalent to investing directly in the underlying asset. Structured investments may have limited or no liquidity, and investors should be prepared to hold their investment to maturity. The return of structured investments may be limited by a maximum gain, participation rate or other feature. Structured investments may include call features and, if a structured investment is called early, investors would not earn any further return and may not be able to reinvest in similar investments with similar terms. Structured investments include costs and fees which are generally embedded in the price of the investment. The tax treatment of a structured investment may be complex and may differ from a direct investment in the underlying asset. UBS and its employees do not provide tax advice. Investors should consult their own tax advisor about their own tax situation before investing in any securities.

Important Information About Sustainable Investing Strategies: Sustainable investing strategies aim to consider and incorporate environmental, social and governance (ESG) factors into investment process and portfolio construction. Strategies across geographies approach ESG analysis and incorporate the findings in a variety of ways. Incorporating ESG factors or sustainable investing considerations may inhibit the portfolio manager's ability to participate in certain investment opportunities that otherwise would be consistent with its investment objective and other principal investment strategies. The returns on a portfolio incorporating ESG factors or sustainable investing considerations may be lower or higher than portfolios where ESG factors, exclusions, or other sustainability issues are not considered by the portfolio manager, and the investment opportunities available to such portfolios may differ.
