What's new: Eternal announced its 2Q26 results after market hours.

What's the impact: 2Q26 results beat. 2Q26 revenue reached TWD472.5m, up 13% QoQ and 32% YoY, broadly in line with consensus. The gross margin came in at 43.4%, exceeding our forecast and consensus by 2.9pp and 2.7pp, respectively, mainly on improved capacity utilisation. Without the one-off employee stock option expense in 1Q26, 2Q26 operating profit beat our forecast and consensus by 15% and 31%, respectively. Supported by a lower tax rate, EPS was TWD0.67, exceeding our forecast and consensus by 29% and 37%, respectively.

ABF expansion trend remains intact. In line with customers' shipment schedules, management has guided for sequential monthly revenue growth throughout 3Q26. We forecast 3Q26 revenue to increase by 30% QoQ to TWD615.2m. With high-end products gradually ramping up, we expect the gross margin to expand by 2pp QoQ to 45.4%. The sharp increase in backlog provides a clear leading indicator of accelerating growth ahead. Eternal's order backlog as of end-July increased by >180% from TWD286m at end-1Q26. Continued upward revisions of ABF capex among substrate manufacturers should provide further support to its order momentum: 1) Unimicron (3037 TT, TWD969, Buy [1]; covered by Sheng Cheng) raised its 2026 capex budget by 58%, primarily to expand ABF capacity; 2) Kinsus (3189 TT, TWD828, Buy [1]; covered by Sheng Cheng) announced additional capex and introduced a customer co-investment mechanism through equipment subsidies; 3) ZDT (4958 TT, Not rated) is aggressively expanding its Shenzhen capacity; and 4) SEMCO (009150 KS, KRW1,356,000, Buy [1]; covered by SK Kim) announced a KRW8tn investment plan through 2040 for its AI server package substrate business. To meet robust demand, Eternal plans to increase capacity at its Japan plant from 18 to 25 units by mid-2027. It also plans to double capacity at its China plant to ease the Japan plant's capacity bottleneck by taking over production of low/mid-range products. We expect this capacity reallocation to provide further upside to Eternal's product mix and profitability.

What we recommend: We reaffirm our Buy (1) rating and maintain our 12-month TP of TWD600 based on an unchanged target PER of 40x, applied to our 1-year forward EPS forecast. As a key beneficiary of the ongoing ABF capacity expansion cycle, we believe the recent global technology stock pullback presents an attractive entry point for Eternal. Key downside risk: slower-than-expected substrate capex growth.

How we differ: We likely conduct a more comprehensive analysis than others on ABF industry demand.
