ACT: Expecting accelerated profit improvement and higher expectations

We revise our earnings forecasts for Taiyo Yuden following 3Q results, raise our price objective, and reiterate our Buy rating on the stock. Since we raised our rating to Buy in October 2025, the share price has stalled along with bouts of high volatility. The stock is stuck between expectations for earnings improvement driven by MLCCs and concerns regarding temporarily sluggish MLCC orders in 2Q, the memory supply crunch, and the Iran war. However, we expect the share price support level to move higher as quarterly earnings improve heading into 2H 2026 and expectations rise.

KNOW: Upturn in business environment for high-end MLCCs on growing AI infra investment

The main reasons we expect earnings to improve are as follows. 1) We look for an increase in demand on continued growth in AI infrastructure investment. 2) Easing price pressure from improved supply/demand conditions: As demand grows for MLCCs used in AI servers, which have high process loads, we expect a tighter supply/demand balance for high-end MLCCs, including those used in other applications using equivalent manufacturing processes. Although we have not factored this into our forecasts, we also see the possibility of price hikes. 3) Structural reforms for communications devices: The company carried out further structural reforms in FY3/26 in response to earnings deterioration stemming from the rise of Chinese manufacturers. In FY3/27, we expect the company to cut fixed costs to stabilize operations. The company aggressively expanded its MLCC production bases during the COVID-19 bubble and while higher fixed costs weighed on earnings in 2023–2024, we think the company will be able to make good use of these bases as AI demand grows.

WATCH: Order trends could change perception of the stock

MLCC orders picked up from the second half of 3Q thanks to AI server applications and were at a high level in Dec–Jan according to the company at its 3Q results briefing. (See page 2 for more on this.)

MEASURE: Raising our target multiple

Our previous price objective (¥4,200) was based on our FY3/27 EPS forecast and a target PER of 20x. This multiple references the past range during periods of earnings recovery. We raise our price objective to ¥6,000 after revising our earnings forecasts (assuming a forex rate of ¥160/$) and lifting our fair-value multiple to just over 25x based on our outlook described above.

While the increase in MLCC orders may include orders that were pulled forward before the Lunar New Year, it is also possible that demand for high-end MLCCs has grown further on AI benefits (e.g., the high level of AI infrastructure investment, higher components used per unit and a greater added value stemming from advances in AI server functionality, and AI agents stimulating CPU demand). We intend to confirm these points based on recent order trends, which should become clear when FY3/26 results are released. If the orders trend remains strong, the market is likely to take note of structural demand growth, which should push up expectations for price hikes and medium-term growth and trigger a reappraisal of the shares.

ESG and shareholder returns

Environmental

Taiyo Yuden implements health & safety/environmental initiatives like: 1) developing, producing and offering environmentally-friendly products; 2) meeting regulations and stakeholder environmental health and safety requirements; 3) preventing occupational and pollution incidents; 4) training all employees to understand their role regarding health, safety, and the environment; and 5) publicizing the status of health and safety/environmental initiatives. In its medium-term business plan, the company has set the following targets to create social value: 1) reducing GHG emissions (in absolute terms) by 42% in FY30 (versus FY20 levels); and 2) reducing waste and water usage intensity by 10% in FY25 (versus FY20 levels).

Social

The company's products are critical components for various devices, including digital consumer devices, automobiles, factory automation/industrial machinery, and medical equipment. The company also supports innovation in the tech sector through its passive components, including ceramic capacitors for high-capacity electric circuits that power high-speed, low power consumption microprocessors, as well as SAW filters for mobile phone/smartphone wireless circuits. Taiyo Yuden contributes to society through these products.

The company's CSR philosophy is to act with a social conscience to gain the trust of society, respecting human rights, and while obeying all laws, regulations and international rules. The company strives to gain customer trust through its business operations, by developing and providing safe and useful products/services. Taiyo Yuden works to reduce its environmental impact to preserve the global environment. While competing in a fair, transparent and free manner, the company works to maintain healthy relations with governments/public authorities, citizens, and organizations. The company has an employee diversity policy and respects differences among all workers. It is striving to create a workplace where employees can work with a sense of security. The company values harmony in each country and region, and acts to contribute to society. It communicates with the wider community, disclosing corporate information in a timely and appropriate manner.

Governance

The company has nine directors, of whom six are non-audit/supervisory committee (three of whom are outside directors), while two of the three audit/supervisory committee are outside directors. Representative director, president and CEO Katsuya Sase, born in 1964, became an operating officer of the company in June 2013, a director in June 2016, and took on his current role in June 2023. Mr. Sase has extensive experience in the MLCC business, and in recent years was also responsible for corporate planning and new business promotion. In the past, many of the company's top managers came from the sales area. However, two consecutive company presidents, Shoichi Tosaka, the previous president (and now chairman of the board), and Mr. Sase, the current president, came from the development & engineering area.

Shareholder returns

The Medium-Term Management Plan 2025, which commenced in FY3/22 is scheduled to conclude in FY3/26. It is expected that a new medium-term management plan starting from FY3/27 will be announced at the time of the earnings results for FY3/26.

Shareholder returns are of the greatest importance to management. The company has stated its aim to return 30% of profits, including via share buybacks. The company plans to increase its distribution of profits to shareholders once it has built a stable and sustainable earnings structure and its financial position looks poised to improve with net cash staying positive.
